100-YEAR-OLD FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT DESIGN SET FOR EARLY 2008 INTRODUCTION AT RETAIL.

Bradford, VT, Copeland Furniture, the Vermont manufacturer of transitional and contemporary hardwood furniture has announced that they are introducing, at the Fall 2007 High Point Furniture Market, chairs designed by Frank Lloyd Wright in 1908, but never built. Copeland holds the exclusive license from Wright's heirs, the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation, to build the furniture designs of America's preeminent architect.

Wright's original sketch for the dining chairs for the 1908 Boynton house in Rochester, New York

The Boynton Dining Chairs were designed for the E.E. Boynton House in Rochester, New York. Mr. Boynton wanted comfortable seating for his guests so Wright designed a chair back with a compound curve in that would support a person's shoulders and give lumbar support for the lower back. Lacking the technology to actually create the compound curved panel, the design was relegated to Wright's archives for the last 100 years.

Copeland, working with Bruce Brooks Phieffer and Oskar Munoz of the Frank Lloyd Wright Archives, has resurrected the design and executed this exceptionally comfortable chair, never actually built while Wright was alive. The Boynton Dining Chair is beautiful as well as comfortable - a 100 year-old idea brought to fruition.

Tim Copeland said: "Many people have suggested that Mr. Wright never designed a comfortable chair, particularly in his Prairie years. Like so much of the conventional wisdom about Frank Lloyd Wright, this one is wrong as well."

Also new at Market - The Little Desk: This piece is hardly small; it measures 80" x 40", affording plenty of work and display space. The name comes from the Little Family. Wright designed a home for the Littles' on lake Minnetonka in Wayzata, Minnesota, just west of Minneapolis.

In addition to these new pieces, Copeland is now in full production on recent introductions including the Ingals bed, Dana-Thomas Recliner, Dana-Thomas Occasional Chair, and the Heurtley Spindle Back Chair.
